The king put the louse into a flask and from time to time he allowed him to feed on the princess royal blood leaving on the girls head for some hours.

The louse grew so much that the king had to put it in a barrel. The princess kept on feeding it, and the louse kept on growing until the king had to put it out of the barrel and put it in a bigger cask. Eventually, when it did not fit in the cask, he had to kill it. The king had the louses skin tanned and ordered the royal tailor to make a leather bag.
